

Rewrite Guidelines and Process

Here are the guidelines and the process for doing the rewrite:

- Review your feedback and make sure you understand the changes that need to happen and which points on the rubric they're tied to.
 - If ever you're unsure about how to proceed or have questions about the feedback, schedule a rewrite conference with either Mr. Greene or Abe before school, during lunch or Maker Time.

- Create a simple cover sheet where you note in bullet point fashion the general categorical changes you've made to earn back points tied to rubric criteria
 - No cover sheet, no rewrite ... We are strict about this.

- We don't need to know every single change you made, but we do expect that you address all the items, even minor ones, that were noted in the feedback (on both Turnitin and the rubric). For instance, we don't need to know the very specific, like in this example:
 - "Inserted comma on page 2, line 27, before 'and'..."But the general, categorical changes are important like in this example:
 - "I didn't earn the thesis point because I didn't take a good stand based on the prompt, so I made it more specific by adding X, Y, and Z..."

- Insert the cover sheet as the first page of your original document then resubmit to the revision assignment on Turnitin.com.

You can earn back up to HALF the credit you lost in the first submission.
